Chapter 14

őτι Direct and Indirect Statements

14.1 We have already met several conjunctions - words which link clauses and phrases into longer sentences. The word $\delta\tau\iota$ has three common uses

- as a conjunction, meaning "because, for, since"
- to introduce an Indirect Statement
- to introduce a Direct Statement

14.2 ὅτι as a conjunction indicates a causal relationship between two clauses.

	ότι βλέπουσιν τὰ σημεῖα αὐτοῦ.	because they see his signs.

14.3 Indirect statements - also known as Dependent statements often follow verbs of saying, thinking, feeling, hearing, seeing, hoping, judging, learning, perceiving e.g. "He says that the student is reading.", They thought (that) the dog was barking.

English often uses "that" to introduce the Indirect statement. Greek uses $\mathbf{\tilde{ott}}$ in a similar manner. There is, however, one difference between English and Greek usage : When the main statement is in the past tense, English changes the tense of the dependent statement to the past also. Greek keeps the tense of the dependent statement in its original form - it remains what the original speaker or thinker said or thought at the time.

e.g. in English, we write	"He said that the student was reading."
What he actually said was	"The student is reading."
So Greek would write	"He said that the student is reading."
	εἶπεν ὅτι ὁ μαθητὴς ἀναγινώσκει.

So far the only past tenses we have used have been the Third Person singular and plural of $\epsilon i \mu i$ - I am :

$\tilde{\eta}v$ - he/she/it was, $\tilde{\eta}\sigma\alpha v$ - they were.

Now we meet part of the simple past tense of $\lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma \omega$ - I say. $\lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma \omega$ is irregular, in that it does not keep the same stem throughout its tenses, but, like the English verb "I go (present), I went (past)", uses stems from several verbs. $\lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma \omega$ uses the $\lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma$ - stem for the Present tense, but an $\epsilon i \pi$ - stem for the simple past tense.

$\epsilon i \pi \epsilon v$ - he said, $\epsilon i \pi o \mu \epsilon v$ - we said.

There are only ten such "weirdo verbs" in the New Testament

10. ὁ ὄχλος εἶπεν	The crowd said
ὄτι Ἰωάννης ἐν τῆ ἐρήμῷ ἐστίν.	that John was in the desert.
14.4 Direct statements

Direct statements give us the words that were actually said or thought at the time of the utterance.

e.g. The child said, "I want a cookie." The student thought, "This book is good."

English uses quotation marks to indicate the statement.

Greek has no quotation marks. A direct quotation in Greek usually starts with a capital letter; it is set off from the preceding clause by a comma, and may also be preceded by a $\delta\tau\iota$. In this case the $\delta\tau\iota$ is not translated, and acts merely as a quotation mark - grammatically it is called a " $\delta\tau\iota$ recitative".

Greek does not have a mark for the end of a quotation - sometimes the text is ambiguous as to where a quotation ends. For example, John 3:10 starts a speech by Jesus, which may run through verse 21 - or it may stop earlier and be followed by a commentary by John.
